DESCRIPTION

Project management, for many people, is the 'accidental profession'. Becoming adept at project management however is far from accidental. The skillful project manager has learned from repeated experiences to predict project issues and prevent them before they even occur, or before they adversely impact their organization.

This course focuses on how to design a 'responsive' project by predicting where the problem areas may be hiding. Also how to communicate with peers, team members, and senior leaders in a manner that meets their needs, challenges their thought processes, while using precious time effectively. This class is designed to expand the 'insight' of intermediate to experienced project managers to enable them to become more effective.
